Semantic Web Company among KMWorld's 2018 '100 Companies That Matter in Knowledge Management'

SemanticWeb Company, the leading provider of graph-based metadata, search, and analytic solutions, today announced that it has been named to KMWorld's 2018 list of the '100 Companies That Matter in Knowledge Management'. This award is another important milestone for the broad acceptance of Semantic Web standards in enterprises.

For the third consecutive year, the Semantic Web Company is recognized as an industry leader in innovation and service from KMWorld.

"In recent months, we have observed a trend on the market: Various organizations have implemented their first versions of applications based on machine learning. In a second iteration, they are now looking for technologies and methodologies that help them to tackle several issues. This is where Machine Learning and Semantics come together, something we have named Semantic AI" says Andreas Blumauer, co-founder and CEO of the Semantic Web Company.

KMWorld Editor-in-Chief Sandra Haimila agrees, "In the years since we first named companies to the list, the technology has changed dramatically. In the beginning, solutions involved basic processes like capturing forms. Now knowledge management encompasses sophisticated capabilities like artificial intelligence, machine learning, and digital assistants."
